

History Learning Journey

In History we seek to promote a love of curiosity. Curiosity is key to society's development and allows society to break the expected rules and find better ways of living. Understanding of source bias is key to our subject and we promote this at all opportunities, always seeking to understand different interpretations. This is another key skill for a functioning society to have-a society that allows democratic questioning and interpretation of topical matters, and promotes this as a core British value. Learning from History is of vital importance to the future of the UK and the world.
